

Tending the Wounded in Iraq: A Photographic Essay by Lynsey Addario

The New York Times Magazine

MARCH 27, 2005 / SECTION 6

With Jesus As Our Connector

In America's fast-growing exurbs, second-generation megachurches are the new social centers and town squares — providing schools and services and advancing their own notion of community.

Life on the faith-based frontier.

By Jonathan Mahler

The Wounded

Photographs by Lynsey Addario

Treating combat trauma on the ground in Iraq.

Text by Johnny Dwyer

In the cargo hold of a C-17 aircraft, soldiers treated at the Air Force Theater Hospital at Balad Air Base, north of Baghdad, await evacuation to a military hospital in Landstuhl, Germany. This photograph was taken on Nov. 13, 2004, during a mortar attack on the base. The red lights indicate "contingency situations."